Game on, India!

Sports are more than just a pastime. Sometimes, they bring a community together – and in many cases, unite the nation.

We journey through the length and breadth of our country to look at games played traditionally.

These are games that bonded us as children and made us stronger and clear-headed. Games that remind us of days when video games and mobile apps were unheard of.

Come, travel with us. And join us if you can!

CORPORATE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY INITIATIVES BY SHARON PLYWOODS

Sharon Plywoods strongly believes that education is the stepping stone to a bright future. It has supported the construction and maintenance of four Higher Secondary Schools in Gummidipoondi, Tamil Nadu. Every year helping in educating more than 1200 students.

All fall down!

'Pithu' or Lagori, as it is known in southern India, is an outdoor game that demands sharp reflexes, good aim and strong lungs! Seven stones are placed one on top of the other. Players divide themselves into two teams, with one taking aim at the pile of stones. When the stones fall, the other team collects the ball and tries to hit the opponents.

The first team has to avoid getting hit, while rushing to reassemble the stones!

25	26	27	28	29	30	31

A case of 'hit and run'!

Gilli-Danda is a game of two sticks – A shorter one with a raised end called Gilli, and a longer one called Danda. The player strikes the raised end of the shorter stick with the longer one, and as the short stick flips in the air, he strikes it again, sending it over a distance. Another player rushes to pick up the Gilli, while the striker runs to a pre-agreed spot before the short stick is picked up.

Hop, hop and hop a bit more

This universally adored game has its place in India too! All it takes is a flat surface – the street, a ground or even the courtyard. Patterns of rectangles are drawn on the ground and an object is tossed in one of them. The player has to then hop or jump from one rectangle to another until the object is retrieved.

Watch where you're going!

In this classic game, a player is blindfolded and made to move about.
Other players grab the attention of the blindfolded one (the denner) by clapping their hands.
Now the blindfolded one has to catch them solely on the basis of noise.

Heave ho!

This all-time favourite, interestingly was played in ancient Egypt, Greece and China. This sport pits two teams directly against each other where they pull at the opposite ends of the rope. The winning team is the one that succeeds in pulling the other for a certain distance braving the opponents' strength.
